these incidents of his official life in Washington:
"In this city Mr. Simpson was true to his Populistic ideas. He was the picture of simplicity in all he did, but he knew how to do striking things, and the house of representatives was the place in which his acts were frequently the subject of much interest."
"Jerry Simpson helicied that the pro-

"Jerry Simpson believed that the pro-lective tariff was the cause of much of the trouble that the farmers of his state suffered. He believed that if the tariff were lowered the competition from foreign countries would not only lower the prices of necessaries of life, but would also result in the production of better goods by American results. but would also result in the production of better goods by American manufacturers. On one occasion when the tariff was up for consideration, Mr. Simpsom appeared on the floor of the house with a bundle under his arm. It was carefully wrapped so that its contents were not known to any one. Any ordinary visitor to the Capitol would have been stopped with such a bundle, which might have suggested possible danger to the watchman. But Mr. Simpson carried it himself and was not questioned. When he reached his desk he laid the bundle there carefully. He was to make a speech on the tariff that day, and the bundle lay there when he began his remarks.
